Erin Jackson Wins Gold

Erin Jackson (b. September 19, 1992) began inline skating when she was 10 years old and spent 15 years piling up titles and traveling the world. At the 2018 Pyeongchang (South Korea) Winter Olympics, she became the first Black woman to qualify for a U. S. Olympic long track speed skating spot. And although she finished in 24th-place in the women's 500 meters at the Gangneung Oval, Jackson was considered a star in the making and the future of U. S. long track speed skating. Four years later, the 29-year-old former inline speed skater arrived at the Beijing (China) Winter Olympics as the top-ranked ice speed skater in the world in the 500, and on February 13, 2022, she won gold in the women's 500 meters at the National Speed Skating Oval with a time of 37.04, earning her first Olympic medal in what historically has been her best event. Jackson is the first U.S. woman to win a speed skating gold at the Olympics since Bonnie Blair did so in 1994, as well as being the first Black American woman to win gold in an individual sport at the Winter Olympics. For Jackson, the move to ice did not come until just five years ago, after she graduated from the University of Florida with a degree in Materials Science & Engineering.
